A tale of two County real estate markets

By Adam Frisk
Local Journalism Initiative Reporter

After a slow start to begin 2026, the Haliburton County real estate market rebounded through the summer, but as Andrew Hodgson explained, the region shifted into a “tale of two markets.”

Speaking to The Highlander, Hodgson, a 19-year veteran in the County’s real estate market, said that while the overall sale volume has for the most part matched last year’s figures, the dynamics of the area shifted.

“We’ve had a good summer, but it’s almost a tale of two markets,” Hodgson said. “In the high-end market, people with money are buying. They’ve been on the sidelines waiting for market conditions to improve. Prices have drifted down enough and now they’re jumping in.”

The luxury market was a main driver of summer transactions, keeping average prices slightly elevated year-to-date despite an overall softening of property values, Hodgson said.

“They’re not worried about the macroeconomic issues,” he said. “They have money, and they’re buying.”

He said the non-waterfront and mid-range waterfront properties faced stiffer headwinds, with working families looking for starter homes or to move up in the market feeling the strain of the economic climate. He said that even with interest rates stabilizing and five-year fixed mortgage rates settling, buyers who rely on traditional financing have been cautious, waiting to see where the economy lands before buying.

“Interest rates are always an issue... so now they’re low, you can get a five-year fixed for under five per cent. That’s pretty decent,” Hodgson said. “Last year, a lot of people were sitting on the sidelines in the spring waiting for interest rates to hit the bottom. Now we’re pretty sure it’s hit the bottom.”

The County’s housing market has three segments: off-water, waterfront properties, and vacant land. And each segment is experiencing different market pressures. While non-waterfront and waterfront properties have somewhat stabilized, vacant land has taken a significant hit.

During the recent housing boom, high prices for existing homes drove people toward purchasing vacant land to build custom homes. Now, construction costs are high and the prices of existing homes are coming down.

With an increase in inventory heading into the summer season, the County shifted to a buyer’s market. Hodgson said that unlike the seller-dominated conditions of the past few years, buyers have had more breathing room and negotiating power.

Residential and waterfront properties had been averaging 50 days on the market, a slight increase from last year, with sellers getting an average of 96 per cent of their asking price. Bidding wars have also become a thing of the past, with multiple-offer scenarios accounting for less than five per cent of transactions.

“Buyers have more control now. They can have inspections, and they’re not into multiple offers,” he explained. “They can be a little more choosy. They can take their time.”

The demand for property in the County remains closely tied to the Greater Toronto Area, Hodgson said, driven by long-term demographic trends. The real estate veteran explained that, historically, potential buyers would normally look at the distance to local amenities, health-care services and schools. But with the addition of high-speed satellite internet like Starlink, and expanding local fiber-optic networks, the improved infrastructure has paved the way for younger families, tech contractors and the recently retired to make the move from the big cities to Haliburton County.

“We hit the hidden age where we do need some services for these somewhat affluent, younger families and retirees, but everybody’s living longer, and they’re active,” Hodgson said. “They’re looking for things to do. We have way more hockey, for instance, than ever. The arts are unbelievable. All the different things. I tell folks, whatever you’re interested in, we have a club. We have a club for everything.”

Hodgson said he does not expect to see a sudden surge in equity growth or a spike in prices over the winter. Price stabilization, a large inventory, and steady interest rates offer a good opportunity for buyers to make a move in Haliburton County.

We have a thing for cottages on a point. You get more shoreline and more lake - and fewer neighbours. Indeed, there's 376 ft. of waterfront and western exposure on Stormy Lake, and nearly two acres of land. That's all the space and privacy you need. This year-round cottage is ready to go as soon as you sign the closing papers - it comes furnished. There's a finished basement with nine-foot ceilings from where you can walk straight out to the lake. Four bedrooms in total. And on a separate lot is a garage with space for two cars or your boats. Upstairs is a 600 sq. ft. unfinished loft with plenty of possibilities.

Wrap-around decks make the most of the views. There's one at this cottage, so from morning coffee to evening cocktails you can enjoy the breeze from Billings Lake. Not that the inside isn't airy - look at the height of that open-concept kitchen/living room! There are four bedrooms here, including two and a bathroom on the main level if you're not into climbing stairs. Access to the west-facing shoreline is easy across the lawn to a sandy entry. There's also deeper water off the end of the dock. We think living seems easy at this year-round home or cottage. More info from Chris James, broker, trilliumteam.ca. $845,000.

AT HOME IN THE WOODS

This cottage oozes charm, from the woodland feel to the rocky shoreline. You're on Little Kennisis Lake, off a municipal road – easy access to the marina and its pickleball, Haliburton Forest and the bigger Kennisis

Lake – but with a private setting. There are four bedrooms here, so enough room for family and friends. Imagine evenings by the indoor wood stove, or starry nights around the outdoor fire pit. This sounds like cottaging the way it always was.
